All shell and tube heat exchangers look similar from outside, but the real and key differences lie inside construction, the tube pattern and shell side baffle design.

A baffled multi-pass shell and tube heat exchanger enjoys the highest reputation of high efficiency, as baffles can also keep the tubes straight from sagging in running which will reduce the efficiency up to 50% down or more.